Answer:

The above chart showcases the information based on the emigration of British citizens to 5 countries. It can be clearly noticed that emigration to Australia has been constant and the most. Whereas, the other countries saw a constant decline in the emigration rate.

The most acceptance of British immigrants was seen by Australia followed by Spain. While Australia was at 40,000 in 2004 then declined slightly in 2005 but saw a whopping rise in 2006 at 50,000 and ended with 44,000 in 2007. In constant, Spain started with 34,000 in 2004 and continued at the same pace in 2005 as well, followed by a fall to 32,000 in 2006 and landed under 30,000 in 2007.

Coming to the other countries, they remained under 30,000 mostly. New Zealand started with 23,000 in 2004, then with a steady decline ended with 21,000 in 2007. The USA has quite a disparity in its numbers with 23,000 in 2004 to 18,000 in 2005, to again 23,000 in 2006 eventually ending with 20,000 in 2007. Lastly, France has a drastic upsurge from 22,000 to 33,000 immigrants in 2005 followed by a blow resulting under 20,000 in 2007.
